IMPORTANT INSTRUCTIONS

In some cases, lots, buildings, structures, or uses were legally in existence at the time that the zoning regulations were enacted. These are called "non-conforming" which means they do not conform to the existing law but they can remain in their present state. Since changes to non-conforming lots, buildings, or structures, or expansion of non-conforming uses, is severely restricted under the Zoning Code, some property owners may find it useful to document that their property is a legal non-conformity and has authorization to continue. Such documentation may be required by a lending institution at the time of sale.

The Zoning Administrator may, after reviewing evidence submitted, find that the non-conformity did legally exist prior to the zoning regulations. When that happens, the Zoning Administrator will notify the applicant and issue a Certificate of Non-conformance. This certificate should be retained by the property owner for future reference.
